MEMORANDUM OF OBJECTS AND REASONS

The Principal object of this Bill is to anchor the existence and practice of in vitro-fertilization in statute law. While it is acknowledged that infertility affects a lot of women of reproductive age in Kenya and in vitro fertilization is often a couple’s or individual’s only chance at conception there has never been an attempt to clothe the practice of in vitro-fertilization in a fine statutory line. It is imperative to note that many women who require in vitro-fertilization rely on doctors who may not be qualified to undertake the procedure and as a result leading to the deaths of many women and children.

The entire legal framework does not provide any substantive and procedural essentials for in vitro fertilization; most of the Acts that relate to health care for example the Medical Practitioners and Dentist Act (Cap.253) and the Medical Laboratory and Technologists Act (No. 10 of 1999) are silent on this fundamental matter. The result therefore is that the practice in in vitro fertilization which is very crucial to this country goes about in a state of virtual legal nudity.

This Bill therefore seeks to address these challenges and thereby empower and strengthen the practice of doctors in the area of in vitro fertilization. This will not only enhance the in vitro fertilization surveillance but also strengthen control and avoid losses.

Further, the Bill makes provisions that address not only the legal voids but also the likely societal concerns e.g. the consents necessary before undergoing in vitro-fertilization, regulation of the handling of embryos resulting from the in vitro-fertilization processes, protection of the identity, status and welfare of children borne as a result of in vitro fertilisation, obligations of persons seeking to undertake the human in vitro-fertilisation and their status as parents upon obtaining children through the process.

Significantly, the Bill creates an In vitro Fertilization Authority to regulate the processes of human in vitro-fertilisation and in particular to develop standards, regulations and guidelines on in-vitro human fertilization, to undertake research on the conduct, control and treatment of in-vitro fertilization, to grant, vary, suspend and revoke licenses to provide advice and information to persons receiving in-vitro fertilization treatment including persons providing gametes or embryos and prescribe minimum requirements for the physical infrastructure for in-vitro fertilization clinics among others.

Countries which have designed a legal framework on human reproductive technologies have had to deal with a number of weighty and somewhat controversial issues. These include the appropriate balance between legislation, regulation and reproductive freedom/liberty, the interplay between ethics and legislative intervention in human reproduction, keeping the law abreast with continuous and tremendous advancement in modern science and technology.

Examples of the Countries with legal frameworks for this area are Australia, UK, and South Africa among others.

Modern human reproductive technologies continue to evoke significant and often emotive ethical and scientific debate. More importantly, these technologies have brought novel legal challenges, particularly in the areas of marital relations, reproductive liberty, reproductive privacy, child rights and parental rights and responsibility.

Unfortunately, the Kenyan legal system lacks laws for the regulation of modern human reproduction technologies. The stark reality is that Kenyans continue to enter into arrangements involving modern reproductive technologies in spite of the absence of a legal regime for their regulation. This Bill therefore responds to the obvious need for a legal framework for regulation of human reproductive technologies and in particular, in-vitro fertilization in humans.

Even though decisions touching on reproduction and copulation fall within the private domain of individuals, there are formidable arguments in favour of legislative control on assisted reproduction. First, it is beyond debate that the state has a legitimate interest in restricting regulating reproductive freedom if there is demonstrable harm or negative impacts on society. Also, due to reliance on technology in assisted reproduction, the state has a legitimate interest in ensuring high standards of treatment, with a view to enhancing safety and protecting individuals from exposure to high levels of risk. Furthermore, the intervention of a third party in assisted reproduction (i.e. a doctor or clinic) removes the matter from private domain to public domain, warranting legislative intervention.

Therefore by enacting this Bill, the country would be taking a lead in helping couples who are not able to have children due to fertility problems conceive through in vitro fertilization.

PART I of the Bill contains preliminary provisions

PART II of the Bill provides for establishment of the In-Vitro Fertilization Authority with general mandate to regulate in vitro-fertilization processes in accordance with the Act;
